

Selection Process Stages	What You Need To Do
	Submit your application ensuring all relevant documentation and your up-to-date contact details are included
NSW Health receives application and notifies you by email/letter	Give yourself the best possible chance of success. Use the application assessment period to prepare for an interview. For tips and hints on interview techniques see Applying for a Health Job .
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Applications assessed by selection panel • Short list developed
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Short listed applicants contacted • Date and time for interview confirmed • Applicants notified of any extra assessment methods
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Interview conducted • Other assessment activities may be utilised including short presentations or skill tests 	Ensure you bring original documentation to the interview - this includes proof of identity requirements as detailed by in the application kit. Good Luck!
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Referee and qualification checks made • Employment screening conducted 	Don't forget to alert your referees to expect a call from a NSW Health representative.
Initial offer may be made dependant on results from checks and screening	Ensure you read the written offer carefully, if you have any concerns please speak with the contact person. Your official acceptance of the written offer will finalise the process
Official offer made in writing	