Tattoo ink safety warning for tattoo premises (update 1)

Date issued: 6 June 2014

Issued by: Chief Health Officer, New South Wales Issued to: All premises conducting tattooing

Key messages

- This advisory does not refer to a current Australian product recall and is for information only.
- The European Union have recalled nine tattoo ink products (listed in Table 1). Some of these products contain a chemical compound (phenylenediamines) and/or higher than permitted levels of trace metal contaminants.
- In NSW it is illegal to obtain, supply, possess or use products one to six* that the EU have recalled and these products should be disposed of. While products seven to nine may be legal in NSW, it is suggested that these products are not used.
- It is the responsibility of tattoo premises to ensure that they request a product quality data sheet (certificates of analysis or an equivalent statement) when purchasing inks from suppliers or directly from manufacturers to confirm that the product is safe and legal for use in New South Wales.

What is the issue?

The EU RAPEX system, a rapid alert system for non-food dangerous products, has recalled particular tattoo ink products (refer to Table 1: Specifications of products recalled by EU RAPEX system). Some of these products contain a chemical compound (phenylenediamines) and/or higher than permitted levels of trace metal contaminants. The European authorities have classified the recall risk as 'serious', the highest of four risk levels.

In NSW, it is illegal to obtain, supply, possess or use products containing phenylenediamines in preparations for skin colouration (tattooing) unless authorised under the Poisons and Therapeutic Goods Regulation 2008. Recalled products one to six listed in Table 1 contain phenylenediamines and are thus illegal in NSW unless authorised by exception. Any product should be disposed of by returning it to the supplier.

While recalled products seven to nine may be legal in NSW they may present a risk to health, it is suggested that these products are not used.

What are the risks?

These inks contain hazardous chemicals.

These inks may provoke a localised allergic reaction from the chemicals they contain. There is no information on the long term impacts from tattoos containing these inks.

For further specific product information see the attached product recall list.

Prevention

For tattoo premises:

All premises conducting tattooing are advised to be aware of the recent recalls of tattoo ink in the European Union and ensure that they are not using these products.

It is the responsibility of tattoo premises to ensure that they request a product quality data sheet (certificates of analysis or an equivalent statement) when purchasing inks from suppliers or directly from manufacturers to confirm that the product is safe and legal for use in New South Wales.

Under the Public Health Regulation 2012 there is a requirement for all businesses involving tattooing to be registered with the local Council. The Public Health Regulation 2012 set out the requirements that proprietors or occupiers of premises registered under the Public Health Regulation 2012 must observe. These include premises cleanliness and infection prevention and control measures for staff and equipment used.

For consumers:

Getting any tattoo carries some health risks. The safest way to get tattoos is from professional tattoo premises that are registered with your local council. Avoid getting tattoos in other countries (outside Australia), particularly in Asia, Africa, Eastern Europe and South America.
